Section 1

Greetings are words we say when we meet someone. They help start a conversation politely. Saying "Hello" or "Good morning" shows respect and friendliness. In formal situations, people might say, "It is a pleasure to meet you." Greetings also include body language like smiling and making eye contact. Different cultures have different ways to greet, like shaking hands or bowing. In school, greetings help teachers and students feel welcome and respected. When students greet others politely, it builds good relationships. Knowing how to greet well makes you more confident in talking to others and helps in many social situations.

Section 2

Greetings change depending on who you talk to. With friends and family, you use informal greetings like "Hi" or "Hey." These are casual and friendly. For teachers or important people, you use formal greetings like "Good morning" or "Welcome." This shows respect. When you write emails or letters, start with polite greetings like "Dear Teacher" or "Hello everyone." This makes your message sound nice. Practice using the right greeting for each situation. This helps you communicate better and be polite. Teachers can help by doing role-plays and group activities to practice greetings.
